The whole number of Bishops, General Superintendents, and Missionary Bishops who have served the Church is sixty-four. Bishops Joyce and McCabe were born on the same day, October 11, 1836, both in the State of Ohio; the former was translated July 28, 1905, the latter December 19, 1906.

Bishop McCabe was admitted on trial to the Ohio Conference in 1860 and stationed at Putnam, where he remained until he entered the army as chaplain in the One Hundred and Twenty-second Regiment of Ohio Volunteers. In 1863, at the battle of Winchester, while engaged in ministering to the wounded, he was captured by an advance of the Confederate forces, and for four months was confined in the tobacco warehouse, surnamed Libby Prison, whose reputation for inadequate provisions for the humane treatment of prisoners was surpassed only by that of Andersonville. While there Chaplain McCabe was sent to the hospital sick with typhoid fever. In a few days General William H. Powell, who was suffering greatly from a wound, was sent there also. The family of General Powell has in its possession a journal in which are the general records of what he did for Chaplain McCabe in those days. He found him supposed to be dying with the fever. He sat down by the chaplain's side and took out a pair of pocket scissors, with which he cut off his long hair which hung down to his shoulders, and his long beard which hung down to his breast. He then secured from the physician of the prison an insect exterminator, which soon relieved him of part of his suffering. The next day he gave him a bath with his own hands, and then asked the prison cook for permission to go to the kitchen that he might secure something which he could eat. On October 3, 1863, General Powell took down from Chaplain McCabe's lips, sentence by sentence, a letter addressed to Mrs. McCabe, and while the tone of it was hopeful of recovery, the chaplain thought at the time that it was the last letter his wife would ever receive from him. When General Powell died, early in the year 1905, the grateful chaplain wrote these and other incidents to the Chicago Tribune, and said:

"I wish to record the fact that I owe my life and all that it may have been worth to my family, to my country, and to the church of God to the tender and faithful ministry of this good man. He was as faithful to me as David was to Jonathan."

In 1868 Chaplain McCabe became Financial Agent of the Board of Church Extension, and in 1873 Assistant Corresponding Secretary thereof, which position he held till 1884, when he was elected Corresponding Secretary of the Missionary Society by the General Conference. When he became Secretary the total income of the Society was $731,125. In the twelve years that he served it grew to be $1,262,248, a gain in the annual income of $531,113; and when the General Committee on Missions met in Baltimore in 1892 the Society was out of debt.

At the General Conference of 1896 Secretary McCabe was elected Bishop, and from the day of his consecration to that high office to the close of his earthly career no man ever served the church with greater fidelity than he. As "Chaplain McCabe" his fame was world-wide. He pervaded the whole land with his presence and his lecture on "The Bright Side of Libby Prison," as neither Gough nor Beecher ever did with any single lecture of theirs. He possessed the gift of song to a remarkable degree. Though not his greatest gift, it was the one most frequently recalled in connection with his name. The Bishop's final illness was of short duration. He was stricken with apoplexy December 11, was taken to the New York Hospital, where he lingered until the 19th, when he peacefully passed away.

Funeral services were held in three cities. In New York, on Thursday evening, December 20, in St. Paul's Church; in Philadelphia, December 21, where the body lay in state in Arch Street Church, and in First Church, Evanston, Ill., December 24, where the interment took place.
